

Design has to be a passion for anyone in the architecture and design fields, and it certainly is for Arti Sondhi Malik. She became aware of this passion during her 21 years abroad, imbibing the design aesthetics of different cultures and countries and converting them into a design vocabulary which is uniquely hers. Her influences range from the avant-garde chic of London's hotspots to the elegance of contemporary classical homes, the bohemian nature of Cape Town's bars and restaurants and the vibrancy and the intricacy of our own Indian culture. She was trained at the Inehbald School of Design in London and has created residential and hospitality spaces in Johannesburg, London and Delhi.

Her Delhi-based company, Arti Sondhi Living, is an architectural and interior design firm. They address the different aspects of design in everyday living. When approached by a client, they undertake a detailed briefing; after this, the challenge is to find bespoke design solutions which are guided by the client's personality, individual lifestyle and needs, and the dictates of the space being designed. Their focus is to create an aesthetic and ergonomically viable living or hospitality space. Arti has enjoyed all her projects in Delhi as they have been completely different from each other. "The design canvas is different every time, so to speak," she muses.
